FIRST PLACE SOFTWARE CREATIONS

The top BBS in the Boardwatch 100 Readers' Choice Contest was Dan Linton's Software Creations BBS in Clinton, Massachusetts. The system started in December 1989 with one telephone line on a DTK XT, a 2400 pbs modem, and a 209 MB hard drive. By the following October, the system was up to 4 lines, using U.S. Robotics HST Dual Standard modems, a 386 MB hard drive, and a LANtastic network to tie the computers together under PCBoard BBS software. With Linton's background in hardware design, the system largely served as a technical information center for other local BBS operators.

In March 1991, Linton released his first shareware program, titled Picture Puzzle. The popularity of the system increased as it became known as the home system of Picture Puzzle. As more and more BBS operators and callers from around the country called to get the latest version of this software, Creations blossomed. Today, Software Creations runs PCBoard version 15.0, Novell 3.11 local area network, and other top services. Dan has developed a following around the country. Congratulations Dan. For those interested, you can reach Software Creations' BBS at 508-368-7139.

These are just a few of the many PCBOARD users in the top100 readers choice poll.

• DNIS Data Port Network Information System for Outstanding BBS Gateway To Multiple Information Services.

The DNIS bulletin board of Michael Simmons is an excellent example of a low-cost feature-rich community bulletin board system serving the resort community of Palm Springs, CA. Unique features of DNIS include extraordinary customization of high speed information ex-change services such as United Press International, stock market quotes, reports from major brokerage firms, Business News, TechWire and many others. By 1994 DNIS plans to expand its PCBoard to over 12 lines with 13 gigabytes. Congratulations Michael.
Call DNIS' BBS at (619) 864-1468.

• AQUILA BBS for Outstanding BBS Organization, Features, and Design

Aquila has grown into a professional, high quality, on-line service. Being the first to work with new technology, Aquila has tested and researched many new products over the past several years. New modems, drives, networks, ISDN interfaces, satellite feeds and many types of software are only some of the technology the team at Aquila has tested. The Aquila a team is now one of the industry leaders sporting 8 gigs of on-line storage, 42 access lines, ISDN Digital access, and much more. Congratulations Steve Williams and crew.

Aquila's BBS number is (708) 820-8344.

THE NEW PCBOARD V15.0 HAS "FEATURES UNLIMITED."

This long-awaited version of PCBoard is the most configurable, fastest and most powerful PCBoard ever. With the optional new PCBoard Programming Language, or PPL, the configuration options are virtually limitless. The BASIC-like command structure of PPL allows you to write your own modifications, routines, or even applications right into PCBoard, giving your enhancements the same look and seamless feel of native PCBoard commands. This BBS is state-of-the-art.

EDITOR'S LETTER

WHAT'S A BBS?

In the 12 months that I have been working with the ONLINE ACCESS BBS Editions, my definition of a bulletin board has changed. A year ago, a bulletin board was anything that was not CompuServe, Prodigy, America Online, GEnie or Delphi. Now I realize that many boards are offering services that match or even exceed what's on the "Big Five."

The June 24, 1993, edition of "Information Industry Bulletin" contained a list of the largest consumer online services. CompuServe was the largest service, followed by Prodigy and GEnie. What surprised me was the eighth place finish by The WELL, which I thought was just a big BBS. While The WELL, at 7,000 subscribers, has a long way to go before it catches up with CompuServe and its 1.25 million users, this was another sign to me that bulletin boards aren't what they used to be.

In search of a better definition, I contacted Alan Bechtold, president of the BBS Press Service and a new ONLINE ACCESS columnist. According to Bechtold, a BBS is an "online information service generally regional in nature or run from a local or regional perspective." Big boards such as EXEC-PC have now become so generalized that he classifies them as commercial online "wanna-be's " or "gonna-be's." When I asked Gail Williams, conferencing manager at The WELL, the same question, she listed three characteristics of BBS's: no access fee, no customer support and a sysop who runs the board as a hobby.

Is the term BBS becoming obsolete? In his book, "Money with Your Modem," Bechtold recommends that sysops who run a for-profit board refer to their systems as "online information services." Another organization that seems to be supporting a change in terminology is Galacticomm, the BBS software manufacturer.

Galacticomm has recently published a booklet titled " Guide to Public Online Services" According to Galacticomm President Scott J. Brinker, the term "public online service" was chosen over BBS because, "People tend to think of a BBS as a one-line system. This isn't fly-by-night hacker technology anymore." (By the way, Galacticomm's booklet is free and available by calling 800-328-1128.)

What do you think? Is the term "BBS" becoming obsolete? What's the difference between a bulletin board, public online service and commercial online service? Does it make any difference to you?

I'll print some of your responses in our next BBS issue.

Letters to the Editor

DON'T SCREEN THE INTERNET

You bring up a valid concern in the article entitled, "At Play in the Fields of the Internet" (September 1993, V8N5). You point to the diversity of the Internet which introduces "unsavory" elements to the user. While I agree that minors are the responsibility of their parents, schools and community, I disagree that decisions concerning the fates of young students should be made by the courts.

It is bad enough that our "free" country allows the commercialization of "public" airwaves. The kind of censorship and regulation seen on the flow of high-tech information pathways (FCC radio and TV licensing) should be resisted in the realm of the Internet.

Students looking for models and raw material on which to make their own decisions should not be fed "screened" information. This practice shows a poor depiction of the "freedom of speech" ideals which are flung around so frequently by politicians and pundits. Students who are denied information on the grounds that it is "subversive" or "illegal" are unknowingly being trained in the same hypocrisy which accompanies cries for critical thinking.

In short, the Internet provides a unique forum for discussion and information exchange on a worldwide basis, without restriction. We who are serious about expanding its reach must demand that it be funded to allow more people to access its power. And its contents must not be regulated, or we as a nation will be contradicting our commitment to free speech and thought, the precursors of a democratic society.

PROBLEMS WITH UNIX

The most difficult thing for me as an Internet beginner is dealing with UNIX. I find that I am having to learn much more than I thought I would, coming from a DOS-based PC and accessing the net through a dial-up service.

I would like to see some articles on UNIX basics, or recommendations for books that cover such no-brainer topics as: how in the heck do you get a directory to tell you what files are in it, and how do you set up a file to download.

Karen Newcombe
America Online

We understand how you feel. Rest assured that you're not the only one out there who is struggling with UNIX. ONLINE ACCESS has scheduled at least one article in 1994 on UNIX for beginners.

In the meantime, try checking out the new book "Learning the UNIX Operating System" by Todino, Strang and Peek. The third edition of this book is available for $9.95 from O'Reilly & Associates. Call 800-998-9938 for more information.

UFINET NEW NUMBER

In the InfoMarketPlace section, an online service call UFINET advertised a monthly fee of $15.00 and a toll free WATS number for customer service. When I called the WATS number, I received a message that it was no longer in service. I then called information in Alamogordo, New Mexico and was told that no business using that name has ever had a listing in that area.

Can you shed any light on this mystery?

Ron Hood
Indianapolis, IN

UFINET has undergone some reorganization. It no longer has a WATS number, but can be reached by telephone at 505-682-2061. The BBS number is 505-682-2024. The company is located in Cloudcroft, New Mexico.

KUDOS TO THE YOUNG

As there are many BBS's in my area, I found myself checking out the Fantasy Island BBS, that you had mentioned in your September issue ("Young Sysop Brings Fantasy to Life"). I have found this system to be nothing less than a gentleman.

Although I am nearly a thousand miles from this fine machine, I prefer it over the locals. The hours of operation are convenient and it lacks ambiguity. Brian Ward, keep up the good work.

Bill Amore
Ft. Myers, FL

For those of you who missed the article, Brian is 16 years old and has been a sysop since he was eleven!

BAUD Street BAUD

By Alan R. Bechtold

Editor's Note: ONLINE ACCESS is pleased to announce that Alan Bechtold has agreed to write a regular column on the latest trends in bulletin boards. Alan has been involved with the BBS industry for the past 10 years as a sysop, writer and service provider.

If you have questions about how to use a bulletin board or are looking for a board that covers a particular subject, please send a letter to Online Access. We'll forward it on to Alan.

RIP Away!

If you're just now discovering bulletin boards for the very first time, you've missed out on some exciting developments — but don't feel left out. You've still got plenty of time to play the game. The bulletin board industry hasn't wrapped up the first quarter yet, and no one's exactly sure when halftime is.

Bulletin boarding BECAME an industry a little more than a year ago. Things are just now kicking into high gear, with twists and turns in the road coming at ninety-five miles an hour. In this column, I'll try to provide a steady hand on the wheel so we don't run into any ditches along the way.

IN THE BEGINNING

I was impressed when I connected to a local bulletin board for the first time more than ten years ago. I'd been dialing commercial online services for some months when a friend told me about a local system he frequented. I logged in to see for myself, and was startled at the system's speed. I could actually jump quickly from menu to menu without any lengthy delays. I was also amazed at how many people were actively calling this single-line BBS, e-mailing among themselves, swapping information and making friends. I wasn't at all unhappy to find hundreds of free public-domain programs that I could download and run on my computer.

All this with no hourly connect charges, long distance, or subscription fees!

Don't get me wrong. At that time, this local system didn't have more than 100 users. It didn't have the thousands of files, news, information services or research resources that the commercial online services did. Still, it was a sleek and functional bulletin board — so much so that it made getting back on the commercial services a bit of a disappointment.

I soon learned there were literally hundreds of these systems all over the country, and more going online every day. Within months, I set up my own company, put a BBS online, and started selling news features to BBS operators.

Then, roughly five years ago, a few brave BBS operators decided they should charge a fee for access to their boards, instead of begging for donations or paying for everything out of their own pockets.

You'd think a monthly modem tax of $1000 per household had been proposed! Those early entrepreneurs suffered a lot of abuse — but only for a while. Eventually, the initial outcry died down, and a few dedicated callers (along with some completely new ones) paid the fees.

Operators of pay boards found that this new source of income enabled them to assemble a more extensive collection of files. They also found they could afford to subscribe to news services (mine and others), purchase larger hard drives for all those files and install ever-faster modems. In short, pay boards grew bigger and better. Naturally, this attracted more callers.

ONE BBSCON MAKES A DIFFERENCE

This trend continued until, suddenly, some bulletin board operators realized they were "professionals." Still, it wasn't really an industry until, a little more than one year ago, the first ONE BBSCon — a polished, professionally-run industry trade show for BBS operators — was held in Denver, Colorado. There had been amateur and non-profit conventions for modem users and BBS operators before this, but they were nothing like ONE BBSCon! Nearly 1,000 people attended that first convention, and I credit it with launching the BBS industry as we know it today. The second ONE BBSCon, held this past August in Colorado Springs, attracted roughly 2,000 people. Next year's is expected to double in size, too.

While all this might have BBS "old-timers" lamenting the passing of the free and open BBS world of a few years ago, it's important to remember this growth means that pay systems have more money to spend on system improvements. There are also more vendors offering innovative services and features to the bulletin board operators.

Meanwhile, computer prices continue to fall, and competition is heating up in the BBS software market. Consequently, it's still possible to operate a BBS as a reasonably inexpensive hobby, at no charge to callers. In fact, there are actually thousands more free "hobby" boards in operation today than there ever were during the "good old days."

It's the best of both worlds and I'll be here, in every BBS issue, to point out some of the most important developments and explain what they mean to you and to the industry as a whole. I've worked closely with many of the movers and shakers in this burgeoning industry, and maintain regular contact with many more. Anything I don't already know from experience I can usually find out with a phone call. I'll make sure you benefit from my experience and contacts in every installment of this column.

RIP GRAPHICS

For example, the hottest topic at this summer's ONE BBSCon was RIP graphics. (RIP stands for Remote Imaging Protocol.) This is an exciting interface to bulletin boards which allows you, the caller, to view colorful icon-based screens, similar to a Windows program, when you call a BBS.

Instead of typing commands or letters to move from menu to menu or option to option, you just point at an icon and press the button. You have to use a special terminal emulation program to call these systems and see the RIP graphics screens, but this program is available for free from bulletin boards using RIP graphics. To use RIP, you will also need at least an EGA monitor (CGA won't work) and a two-button mouse.

There are also other BBS graphics interfaces — RoboBoard, NAPLPS, and FracTerm, to name but a few — which claim to be better, easier to use and more functional than RIP. Even if that's true, you'd better download the RIPTerm program and get used to it. Virtually every major BBS software package on the market already supports the RIP graphics standard — or has announced plans to support it. There are also numerous programmers designing exciting, colorful online games and BBS utilities with RIP graphics. RIP is definitely here to stay.

To find RIPTerm (and to see it in action), try calling these bulletin board systems at the following data numbers:

Some boards, such as Imageworld, will ask you when you login if you use RIP. If you type "no", the board will then ask you if you want to download the RIPTerm program. (Imageworld will offer to mail the file to long distance callers.)

On other boards, you will have to find the RipTerm file. Try looking for a file called "RIPTM154.ZIP". If you can't find the file, leave a message to the sysop asking for help. If you find "RIPTM154.ZIP", you will have to unzip the file using the shareware "PKUNZIP". Once you have unzipped the program, retrieve and print out a text file called "RIPTERM.DOC" through your word processor. This file contains further instructions on how to use RIPTerm.

Once you've set up the RIPTerm program on your computer, you can then call any BBS offering RIP graphics. Hundreds of these boards are already in operation. There will be hundreds more by the time I'm back here next issue, bringing you up-to-date on all the latest developments in the BBS industry. Happy modeming until then!

IF YOU HAD THREE WISHES,

Take a close look and you'll see why so many sysops are switching to the Synchronet Multinode Bulletin Board System. For one, message networking is second nature for Synchronet. Not only does Synchronet support FidoNet, QWK, and PostLink (RIME) message networks, but network considerations are integrated into every aspect of the BBS. Synchronet's hierarchical message and file areas are the perfect organizational solution for today's multi-network message and CD-ROM file areas. Synchronet has many built in features that other packages either don't offer or require an add on, such as multichannel and private key by key chat, offline reader features, and multiuser CD-ROM support. First time operators appreciate Synchronet's elegant menu driven configuration, while experienced sysops revel in its wealth of options and flexibility. The list goes on and on. But don't take our word for it, check out the competition first. With Synchronet, you won't need three wishes.

Why doesn't Synchronet have a special "multiport" version? Because Synchronet was designed from the ground up as a high-speed multinode BBS capable of running up to 10 nodes on a single 486. It's advanced interrupt driven output design combined with DESQview optimizations maximize CPU utilization, allowing Synchronet to out perform other systems running special "multiport" versions on expensive coprocessed I/O cards. For performance, features, and value, nobody beats Synchronet.

5.5 THINGS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW ABOUT THE Internet

BY KEVIN M. SAVETZ

The media has become fond of likening the Internet to an "information super highway." This may be so, but most of us spend our first months on the Internet speeding the wrong way down one-way streets, making illegal U-turns and annoying the peace officers.

The Usenet newsgroup "alt.internet.services" is a place for questions and answers about the Internet's services. Internauts of all experience levels gather there to find out about the latest 'net tools (let's see: 40 gophers, three bookstores, and two Coke machines...) and to swap questions and answers about Internet services.

If you hang out around new Internet users long enough, you start to see a pattern: the same questions pop up again and again as each new batch of "newbies" enters the fray and begins to discover the wonders of the Internet. This article lists several frequently asked questions about Internet services, and more importantly, gives the answers.

1. IS THERE AN ENCYCLOPEDIA ON THE INTERNET?

Yes and no. (I didn't say these would be simple answers!) Before considering whether there is an encyclopedia on the 'net, it's important to know what kinds of information you can generally find there. Remember TANSTAAFL - there ain't no such thing as a free lunch: on the 'net, you're not likely to find free access to anything for which you would typically expect to pay a lot of money.

The type of information you're likely to find on the Internet is free information, such as government documents, works with expired copyrights, works that are in the public domain, and works that authors are making available on an experimental basis to the Internet community. Conversely, there are some types of information you are not likely to find on the Internet, most notably, commercial works which are protected by copyright law. An encyclopedia is one example of this, so there currently aren't any freely accessible encyclopedias.

Waitaminute! There are indeed encyclopedias on the 'net, but they are part of closed systems, available (for example) only to students at a specific university, or employees at a certain company. (Sites with this sort of information are usually bound by licensing agreements that state in the strictest terms that only users at that institution may access the database.) The reason for this is about what you'd expect: the companies that make encyclopedias are in business to sell encyclopedias, and you don't stay in business by giving away your product.

So, while the Internet does contain a vast array of good stuff, it can't always replace a trip to a decent library. Walk down the hall and ask the other users at your site if there is an online encyclopedia available for your use. If you can't find one, ask your library if they have one, use an encyclopedia on a commercial online service like CompuServe or America Online, get one on CD-ROM, or (oh, the horror!) amble to the library and thumb through a traditional encyclopedia.

Finally, a caveat: New services are being added to the Internet every day, and someone could put an encyclopedia online. Businesses are flocking to sell their wares on the Internet - who knows if someone will plug in the World Book as a free sample or even on a pay-per-search basis? All we can do is wait and see.

2. HOW DO I SEND ELECTRONIC MAIL FROM THE INTERNET TO ANOTHER NETWORK?

Mail moving between computer networks can be thought of as being carried by a messenger moving a message between cities. At some point in his travels, the messenger must exit one city (or network) and enter another. The transition is called a "gateway." Passing through the gate is easy - all you need is the address of the service to which you are sending mail as well as the username of your intended recipient.

What's the address? It depends on the service. This was covered in the August 1993 edition of Online Access (page 28.) However, there are notable additions. BIX (the Byte Information Exchange, the sister-service of DELPHI) has become the second online service to offer full Internet access. You can send to a BIX user with the address "username@bix.com".

Prodigy, after months of teasing, has announced that its Internet mail gateway is in the final stages of testing. Although Prodigy users won't be able to use FTP, telnet and other Internet services, they will be able to send and receive e-mail to the Internet. The finished mail gateway should be complete by the time you read this article - try sending mail to your favorite Prodigy user with the address "user@prodigy.com" (for example, "BVXF64A@prodigy.com".)

There is quite a bit of information online about using electronic mail and gateways. To learn the basics of e-mail on the Internet, FTP to

3. HOW DO I FIND SOMEONE'S E-MAIL ADDRESS?

With so many computer systems and users in the world, it is impossible to keep a complete "white pages" of the Internet. The problem is compounded because people come and go from the 'net all the time. (For instance, thousands of students come and go every nine months.) Storing and updating that much information would be a daunting task.

It's not totally impossible to find people on the 'net. The more information you know about your associate - name, place of business or school, and so on - the better your chances are of finding his or her e-mail address. Programs exist that, given some amount of information about your associate, can help you track down his or her e-mail address. These tools include Netfind, X.500, the Usenet-posters search, and WHOIS.

For more information on these address-tracking programs and how to find someone on the Internet, you should read: "FAQ: How to find people's E-mail addresses." (FAQ stands for frequently asked questions.) It's available via e-mail by sending "send usenet/news.answers/finding-addresses" in the body of an e-mail message to "mail-server@rtfm.mit.edu". This document is also posted regularly to the Usenet group "news.answers". A program at that address will read your mail, process your request, and reply with mail containing the FAQ.

There is another long document specifically for finding college students' e-mail addresses. It is posted to "news.answers". You can also get the file by anonymous FTP to "rtfm.mit.edu:/pub/usenet/soc.college/Student_Email_Addresses". Or you can send a mail message to "mail-server@rtfm.mit.edu" with a message body of "send usenet/soc.college/Student_Email_Addresses".

Don't forget to use traditional means of communication when necessary. If you have your associate's telephone number, call him or her up and just ask for the e-mail address.

4. WHERE CAN I GET INTERNET ACCESS IN MY AREA?

This used to be a tough question, because many of the resources for finding Internet access are on the Internet itself. This created a sort of a quandary - you needed access to the Internet to find out how to access the Internet. Thanks to new Internet service providers that are available nationally, it's now possible to get online with exceptional ease, start looking around, then search for "better" access. Delphi was the first commercial service to provide full access and will connect you to the Internet for about $1 an hour. Call 1-800-695-4005 to talk to a human about Delphi.

Also, check out one of the many fine books about getting connected to the Internet, such as Ed Krol's "Whole Internet User's Guide and Catalog," which lists dozens of Internet service providers.

If you are a college student or faculty member, check with your campus computer center to learn about the online facilities available to you. Many schools offer free accounts to students and staff. Once you're online, there are other resources to consult for Internet access. Access provider information from the book "Internet: Getting Started," is available via anonymous FTP as "ftp.nisc.sri.com:/netinfo/internet-access-providers-us.txt" and "ftp.nisc.sri.com:/netinfo/internet-access-providers-non-us.txt".

Next, read PDIAL, a list of public access service providers offering dialup access to Internet connections. PDIAL lists both free and pay services all around the world. The PDIAL list is posted semi-regularly to "alt.internet.access.wanted", "alt.bbs.lists", "ba.internet", and "news.answers". To receive PDIAL via e-mail, send e-mail with a message body of "send usenet/news.answers/pdial" to "mail-server@rtfm.mit.edu". To get PDIAL via FTP as "ftp.netcom.com:/pub/info-deli/public-access/pdial".

Also available is NIXPUB, a listing of over 100 free and pay-for-play accessible systems. It is posted regularly to the Usenet newsgroups "comp.misc", "comp.bbs.misc", and "alt.bbs". Retrieval information is near the end of this document.

For more information about service providers and getting on the Internet, read "FYI: Searching for Treasure," FTPable as "nic.merit.edu:/documents/fyi/fyi_10.txt".

Another list of service providers, and tips on getting Internet access, is provided in the "alt.bbs.internet" FAQ, available via FTP as "rtfm.mit.edu:/pub/usenet/news.answers/inet-bbs-faq.Z".

You can also turn to the Usenet community for assistance. Find out if there is a local newsgroup for your area or state. For instance, Columbus, Ohio users can check on the "oh.general" and "cmh.general" newsgroups. Many other areas have regional newsgroups. Ask the locals questions about the area - who better to know the answers?

If all else fails, post your plea for Internet access to the Usenet newsgroup "alt.internet.access.wanted". Note that such requests aren't looked kindly upon if posted elsewhere.

5. IS THERE A LIST OF ALL INTERNET SERVICES?

This is my favorite question, beause it is so common and the answer is so simple: no! There are just too many computers and too many services for anyone to accurately maintain a complete list of Internet services.

However, Scott Yanoff edits a great list of Internet services. It's called the "Special Internet Connections List" which is updated biweekly and is posted periodically to the Usenet group "alt.internet.services". His list is as comprehensive as any could ever be. It includes everything from where to FTP pictures from space, how to find agricultural information, public UNIX, online books and dictionaries, you name it. Check this list before posting the question "Where can I get <whatever> online?" - chances are, it's in there. Finger "yanoff@csd4.csd.uwm.edu" to find ways to receive this list.

There's also John December's "internet-cmc" list, which serves as a pointer to a slew of resources. Its purpose is to list pointers to information describing the Internet, computer networks, and issues related to computer-mediated communication. It points to Internet documents for new users, comprehensive Internet guides, as well as specialized and technical information (for instance, Internet growth studies, maps, and statistics.) It also lists electronic journals and tons of other good things. It is available via anonymous FTP as "ftp.rpi.edu:/pub/communications/internet.cmc".

Also, check out the Internet Resource Guide. This is an excellent guide to major resources available on the network. It includes chapters on Computational Resources, Library Catalogs, Archives, White Pages, Networks, Network Information Centers, and Miscellaneous. It is FTPable as "nnsc.nsf.net:/resource-guide/resource-guide.txt.tar.Z".

Those ought to keep you busy for a while.

5.5 BUT WAIT! I HAVE A QUESTION ABOUT...

Sorry! Whole books have been published about the Internet's services. The best way to learn is to get online, start to explore, ask around, and read all the FAQs that you can.

One which I modestly promote (only because I am the editor of the document) is the "Internet Services Frequently Asked Questions and Answers" list, a file that answers 25 FAQs about the Internet. For the most recent version, FTP to "rtfm.mit.edu:/pub/usenet/news.answers/internet-services/faqor". Or send an email message to "mail-server@rtfm.mit.edu" with a line in the body of the message reading "send usenet/news.answers/internet-services/faq".

Falling prices of high speed modems have online users asking:

BY DAVID HAKALA

Many modem owners are pondering the question this article asks. Most of them are in one of the two following situations:

1) Your trusty 2400 bps (bits per second) internal modem, the one the computer dealer threw in for free, gets you where you want to go. It took a lot of finagling to set up Procomm Plus just right, but now you can log on to anything. Why spend good money for a new modem, perform major surgery on your computer, and spend another two hours on trial-and-error software configuration?

2) You spent $600 on a state-of-the-art 9600 bps modem just three years ago. It's at least four times faster than the old 2400 job, and that's faster than half of the online services you regularly use. Why buy a 14,400 bps modem if you can't always use the extra speed you have now?

Both of these hypothetical modem owners could theoretically reap significant financial and productivity benefits by buying a better modem. In reality, those benefits could be greatly reduced by a number of factors. Your decision of whether to upgrade or not will rest on your individual online usage and the cost of a new modem.

TOP OF THE LINE SAVINGS

These days a state-of-the-art high speed modem has a top operating speed of 14,400 bits per seconds (bps) which is also referred to as V.32bis. The slower 9600 bps standard is called V.32.

Most 14,400 bps modems also come with hardware-based error-correction and data compression features. The error-correction standard is referred to as V.42. The data compression standard is V.42bis. Almost all modems that have V.4.2bis also contain V.4.2.

Simple math clearly illustrates the potential gains of upgrading to higher connect speeds. A 9600 bps modem moves data four times faster than a 2400 bps modem (9600/2400). A 14,400 bps modem is six times faster than 2400 (14,400/2400), and one-and-a-half times faster than 9600 (14,400/9600). This means that a BBS caller could reduce his online costs roughly 80% by upgrading from a 2400 to 14,400 bps modem. A 50% savings could result if a 9600 bps modem user switched to a 14,400 bps modem.

Let's say, for example, that it costs you 10 cents a minute in telephone and connect charges to call your favorite bulletin board. Table 1 illustrates what a full-speed file transfer or nonstop screen display of data would cost you at 2400, 9600 and 14,400 bps.

ONLINE CONNECT TIME AND COSTS

Speed	Online Time	Cost
2400	6 minutes	60 cents
9600	1.5 minutes	15 cents
14,400	1 minute	10 cents

Unlike most bulletin boards, several commercial online vendors have a surcharge for 9600 and 14,400 service. These surcharges will reduce your online savings, but you could still end up cutting your online bill by as much as 66%.

2 buy a new modem?

CompuServe, for example, charges approximately 13 cents per minute for 2400 bps delivery of its "extended" services. It charges roughly 26 cents per minute for 9600 or 14,400 bps delivery of the same services. Table 2 illustrates the costs of a full-speed file transfer or nonstop screen display of data on a CompuServe extended service for each modem operating speed.

Speed	Online Time	Cost
2400	6 minutes	78 cents
9600	1.5 minutes	39 cents
14,400	1 minute	26 cents

Table 2- Cost of using a CompuServe extended service*

*Surcharge applies only to "extended" services. There is no 9600 or 14,400 surcharge for using services that are part of the CompuServe basic package.

Data Compression Packs a Punch

Data compression (v.42bis) is now standard with 14,400 bps modems. This feature tries to save you online time and money by packing up to four characters of data into just one character before sending it through the phone line. Think of data compression as "squeezing out" unnecessary, redundant characters just before data is transmitted over the phone line. Sounds like what they do with orange juice to save on shipping costs!

This "squeezed" character is decompressed back into the original four characters upon receipt. It's like adding water to reconstitute frozen juice. One second's worth of 14,400 bps connect time theoretically can deliver 57,600 bits of data (4 x 14,400).

Another potential money-saving feature of today's high speed modems is error control (v.42). This term actually refers to several techniques used by modems to check the reliability of blocks of data and remove the garbage characters caused by noisy phone lines. Error control is particularly beneficial to researchers who capture expensive records retrieved from online databases. Why pay for data you can't read?

And Now For Reality...

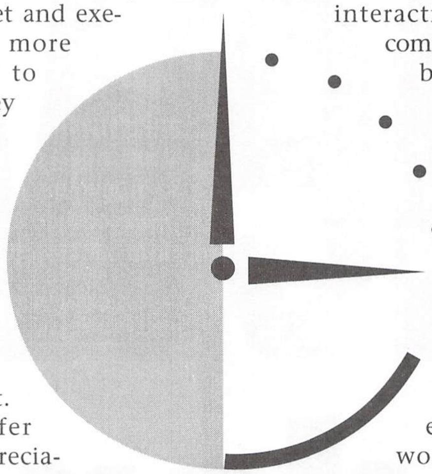
Rarely, will you realize all of these potential connect-time savings. Expect 80% to 95% of theoretical performance gains if you connect to a modem with equal capabilities, most of the time. A number of factors can significantly lower the "effective throughput" touted by modem manufacturers.

The actual degree of data compression achieved and any corresponding throughput gains you experience will depend on the type of data being transmitted. The most compressible data are text or database files. They have lots of blank spaces in their uncompressed forms. Spreadsheet and executable files are more densely packed to begin with, so they do not compress as much.

Any file archived with a utility such as PKZIP, ARC, LHARC, etc., already has most of the "water" squeezed out of it. You won't transfer archived files appreciably faster than the true connect speed of your modem, which is 14,400 bps for high speed editions.

Also, your modem will not be able to go any faster than the top speed of the modem to which it connects. Some of the remote computers you call may be limited to 2400 bps, but don't assume so just because you have always connected at 2400 bps. There could be a high-speed modem on the other end of that number you've been dialing at 2400 bps.

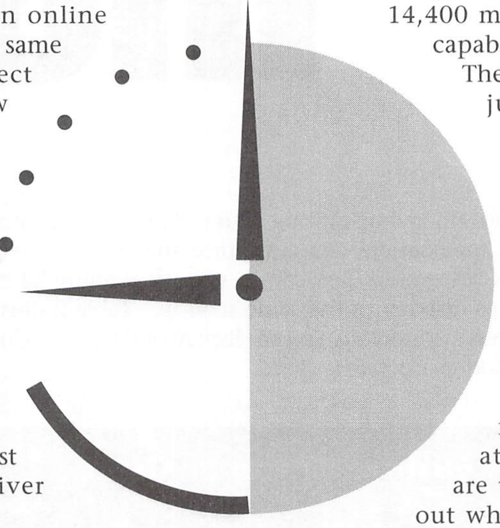
Even if your user manual says 2400 bps is the top speed an online service offers, don't believe it. Many online services have only recently added separate phone numbers for connecting to banks of higher speed modems. Call customer service and ask if they offer 9600 or 14,400 bps access.



How You Spend Your time Online

If most of your online time is spent interacting with the remote computer through the keyboard (writing e-mail, navigating menus, specifying report formats, and so on), your own reading and typing speeds will limit the potential savings of a faster modem.

Even the most thoroughly automated, script-using sessions won't achieve 100% of these theoretical savings. And a query of an online database takes the same amount of connect time no matter how fast your modem is; the remote computer searches at its own speed. You may see the "Working..." prompt faster at 14,400 bps, but you will spend some time waiting for the host computer to deliver your results.



A good rule of thumb is if you spend 80% or more of your online time transferring files, then you should definitely buy a high speed modem. If less than 80% of your time is spent downloading, then you need to more carefully consider the cost of a high speed modem before making your decision.

The Cost of Upgrading

Prices of high speed modems have fallen rapidly in the past two years. One clear trend, which will only get stronger, is the narrowing price gap between a 9600 modem and 14,400 model. Most 9600 modems seem to run between $150 to $200. This price range includes a wide variety of 9600 models including internal, external and fax editions. Most external 14,400 modems seem to cost around $200 to $230. Supra has an internal 14,400 modem with fax capabilities for $150. Therefore, if you're just trying to decide whether to go with 9600 or 14,400, shop around and get a good deal on a 14,400 modem.

If you're currently operating at 2400 bps and are trying to figure out whether to invest $200 in a new 14,400 modem or wait, you have to look at your current online costs and usage. If you're spending over $450 a year on online costs (connect charges and phone bills) and are doing a lot of downloading, then a 14,400 modem would probably be good investment. If you're spending less than that or doing a lot of interactive activities such as chatting or searching, it'll pay you to wait for prices to drop a little more.

Teleflora CreditLine®

In order to accept credit cards on your BBS you will need to secure a merchant account. Many banks and merchant account vendors don't understand BBSs and how they operate. They either refuse merchant accounts to BBS operators or charge high rates for their services. Teleflora on the other hand knows BBSs and wants your business. As a representative for Teleflora, DataSafe can help you secure a merchant account. Give us a call today for a Teleflora application.

SysLaw: The (Elec

Syslaw is not just for sysops. Writer J.W. Olsen reviews the book "SysLaw," and points out the online legal issues that are of importance to both sysops and online users.

BY J.W. OLSEN

As we board our modems and travel through cyberspace, we gradually learn that online conduct largely is based upon the rules of etiquette. In addition, we have legal rights and responsibilities governed by an evolving body of law frequently called "syslaw." As a BBS sysop for seven years and an active participant in the personal computer revolution for even longer, I've observed and have been fascinated by these developments.

Legislatures and courts have often been unsuccessful in wrestling with emerging issues, mainly because encompassing, explicit computer telecommunications law has yet to be codified. Lawmakers have been forced to apply traditional law to unforeseen electronic circumstances. We need look no further than the daily newspaper to see the challenge...electronic invasions of computer networks, threats of viruses and more. Each new phenomenon tends to precede applicable law.

Wouldn't it be useful if someone could make some sense of the chaos, gathering the current information about syslaw into one resource? Two attorneys specializing in telecommunications, computer and intellectual property law, Jonathan Wallace and Lance Rose, thought so. They packed much of the related law and theory into a 300-page book entitled—appropriately enough—-SysLaw. As a leading authority on its subject, SysLaw is a "must" for sysops. It offers a wealth of insight for callers as well.

This article samples some of the more intriguing elements of syslaw, but of course you should check with the book itself and an attorney experienced in this area of law before relying upon the following information for your specific situation.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

Wallace and Rose emphasize that virtually everything found online—messages, files, etc.—properly fall under the protection of the First Amendment. All of the above comprise "speech" in the constitutional sense. Online services are in fact one form of modern-day "press." BBS's are places for people to "peacefully assemble." Cyberspace can also provide a means "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances" through vehicles such as the CompuServe forum established by the Clinton White House.

Taken together, these four notions comprise the entire focus of the First Amendment, the single most important legal aspect of telecommunicating for us to bear in mind. Because "Congress shall make no law" abridging these basic rights, all attempts to limit our online responsibilities must be weighed against this test.

According to the authors, the First Amendment protects our use of BBSes in three primary ways:

- limiting speech that may be considered illegal;
- barring excessive legal burdens that tend to inhibit the running of BBS's as a forum for that speech; and,
- limiting governmental search and seizure which serves to inhibit that forum.

Law of the tronic) Land

We have a right to speech of diverse kinds on BBS's even when the content is controversial. This includes, among other things:

➳ General discussion and information. Examples include gay and lesbian issues, as well as radical left and right politics. The exception involves exchanges which are part of illegal acts. For example, while technically sophisticated callers may discuss most information about computer networks, they generally cannot distribute passwords and other confidential security aspects of those networks.

➳ Defamation. As participants in a de facto "press," callers are generally free to express what they believe about famous people even if the information proves to be false, provided this is not done recklessly or maliciously. (Note that this protection doesn't extend to discussion about other individuals—"everyday" people.)

➳ "Adult" materials. Though obscene matter isn't protected, most adult material isn't considered obscene and is protected speech as interpreted by the courts. Access to such materials on a BBS by children, however, is an area of growing regulation.

THE PRIVATE PARTS OF BBS'S

If you've given the subject of syslaw even a passing thought, you've almost certainly considered the question of privacy—or more precisely, the potential lack of it: Who can read my private revelations? Who may access the phone number and address I gave the sysop?

This is a particularly murky area with no easy answers. The authors begin with a short discussion of relevant law, including the Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986, as amended. In particular, this statute specifically permits sysops—but only sysops—to view private communications on a system unless callers have been clearly advised to the contrary in advance.

Further, sysops otherwise may only divulge private communications to the proper legal authorities—and then only under certain very restrictive circumstances. If a sysop violates your rights by unlawfully making your private communications public, you may sue to have the posting removed, to recover monetary damages and—perhaps the most effective deterrent—to require the sysop to pay your attorney's fees in bringing the lawsuit if you win.

In the first edition of SysLaw, Wallace advocated that the "solution" to this issue was simply disabling or disavowing the private status of all elements of a BBS. The authors now urge a balanced approach under which callers are advised of a system's policy regarding privacy combined with a certain level of sysop review.

You don't even have to declare a copyright (though doing so is a good idea in circumstances in which you expect to exercise your rights.)

On its face, almost every aspect of BBS use of your messages seems to run afoul of copyright law: The copying of your messages onto the BBS' storage system, distribution to other callers—and possible modification, by sysops and others. So, can you exercise control over such activities?

Yes and no. First, most day-to-day BBS activities (storage, retrieval, etc.) are generally protected by an "implied license" to which you tacitly agree by participating. Some BBS's go further by specifically delineating to what use of your messages you're agreeing through such participation. (There are limits to this, however.)

Secondly, copyright law provides for "fair use" of copyrighted material—a legal doctrine with narrower and more specific definition than is commonly understood. Though this subject is too complex for thorough treatment here, suffice it to say that direct quotations from messages of others should be used with discretion.

In short, while implied licenses and fair use tend to protect most everyday use of your messages online, you nevertheless retain a copyright to them which may not be cavalierly exploited by others. For example, reposting messages of others elsewhere without permission risks legal trouble.

CONTRACTUALLY SPEAKING

To resolve—and preferably avoid—such problems, the authors advocate the use of a "caller contract." While this may be unpalatable to some callers, Rose and Wallace believe it is a prudent idea which benefits all concerned—especially if couched in friendly language.

A BBS contract can be a written document, signed and returned before a caller receives normal access to a system. It also can be simply a series of opening screens for new callers which detail rights and obligations, followed by the opportunity to choose between accepting the terms or exiting the system.

For many years, I have personally found both mechanisms to be assets on my own BBS. Clearly-established groundrules ultimately reduce the ill feelings which arise from vague expectations. Basic system privileges are available to all callers after they have read a list of disclaimers and user expectations. These privileges includes messaging, browsing and limited downloading of files. Fuller privileges (more access time, uploading and extensive downloading) are available for callers who capture, sign and mail a form. In the more than 30,000 calls to my system, I've observed that submission of a written form almost guarantees a considerate and rule-abiding user.

LAW OR ETIQUETTE?

Most of the time, life in cyberspace can be governed by common etiquette. Every once and a while, you're going to have know your legal rights and responsibilities. That's precisely the value of SysLaw. As a good citizen of our electronic global society, please do your part. We'll all benefit.

Find Your Way Through the Electronic Mail Grid Lock.

A review of the latest edition of the !%@:: A Directory of Electronic Mail Addressing and Networks by Donnalyn Frey and Rick Adams. (HINT: If you think those characters at the beginning of title are expletives, then you need this book.)

By Jack M. Germain

When Donnalyn Frey and Rick Adams wrote the first edition of !%@:: A Directory of Electronic Mail Addressing and Networks several years ago, sending messages by computer was almost a secret affair. It was very difficult to find out about other networks and their procedures for addressing e-mail. The spread of Internet-style addressing helped remove this secrecy. But it didn't solve the problem of sending messages to a new contact on a computer network. Finding a specific user on a network is still a major problem.

"With over 2,000 networks making up the Internet, how do you find out about the major networks?" Frey asked in explaining why her book is in its third edition. It isn't always feasible to call an office to ask for a contact's network address. For example, if you want to find a colleague at a university in Finland, do you call him up? If you need information on networking in Costa Rica for a new business project, you can't just call the phone company. You have to know what networks are in Finland or Costa Rica and how to contact someone there.

This third edition of the directory lists the major international, national and regional networks. It includes the latest facts on more than 180 major electronic mail networks around the world. Frey and Adams write about research, educational, and commercial network locations, as well as networks in the Commonwealth of Independent States, Eastern Europe, Africa, Asia, the People's Republic of China, Australia and New Zealand.

If you are a novice E-mail user and have to exchange messages over the Internet or any of the dozens of other computer networks that dissect the globe, sooner or later you will need this reference tool. "I can't tell you how many times someone has tried to find out how to send mail to someone on Compuserve from the Internet," says Frey. "The address translation is in the book."

The book begins with an excellent chapter for newcomers to electronic mail. This section covers the basics on message formats, perhaps the most confusing part of e-mail. It isn't uncommon to have an entire screen scroll by filled with message header lines. Frey and Adams take the mystery out of these cryptic entries and explain why they are necessary to move messages from network to network. This chapter also decodes the meaning of mailbox names and puts reasoning behind address domains. For anyone who writes over various networks, the letter combinations can become a bowl of mixed up alphabet soup.

This primer goes a long way to helping you get your mail through the networking mazes. E-mail addresses must be as precise as camera-directed missiles. They are targeted for a specific user's computer in a particular department at an agency or university in a specified country. Oftentimes, messages are routed to one host computer in a bank of network computers. After reading this tutorial on addressing network e-mail, the following address becomes much less intimidating:

Karen%coldsprints%gateway@chemistry.oxbridge.ac.uk

The authors bring an insider's expertise to their book about electronic mail. Donnalyn Frey is a UNIX systems and communications technical writer. Rick Adams is president and founder of UUNET Technologies Inc., a company that provides e-mail services. They write about a tough technical subject, but they do so in an easy-to-read fashion, given the nature of the material.

In addition to e-mail how-to's, Frey and Adams also take a peek at the history of message networking. They explain how disputes between NATO and other government agencies led to the formation of new addressing domains on what became the Internet. Initially, the U.S. Department of Defense controlled the ARPANET, an experimental computer network. Some of the user agencies didn't want to be dumped into military classifications and merged into the Internet.

Much of the structure of international E-mail addresses stems from the Internet set-up, which isn't user friendly. For example, when you dial a telephone, you use a standard phone number. Even if the party you call uses a non-Bell competitor, the call goes through seamlessly. This isn't always so with computer networks. Unless the networks support automated mailing software, you will need the proper addressing sequence. The book guides you through EUnet, USENET, and other UUCP-based networks. It tells you the subtle differences in using EARN, BITNET and FidoNet. It lists the European networks, too. These include the addressing priorities for ACONET, Centernet DFN, Fundesco, FUNET, HEANET, JANET, Reunir, Sunet, SIRFnet, SWITCH, and UNINETT.

All totaled, Frey and Adams fill 458 pages with network data. Besides the opening chapter, the book contains alphabetical listings and cross-referencing columns for domestic and international mail sites. It indexes networks by name, country or area name, and country code. It also indexes subnetwork sites within larger networks.

Several appendices makes it easy to find these subgroups. Appendix A lists commercial, educational, government, and organizational locations. Appendix B catalogs international domains country by country. Two other indices provide country codes and additional addressing information. Cross-references are given in separate listings for networks organized by country, network type, network names, and network abbreviations.

A Directory of Electronic Mail Addressing & Networks is not for the computer hobbyist. It is an excellent source for those who need to be electronic mail experts. This book is essential for system network administrators, and should be on the desk of researchers who want to get in touch with colleagues at other universities. International marketers will also find this a useful reference tool.

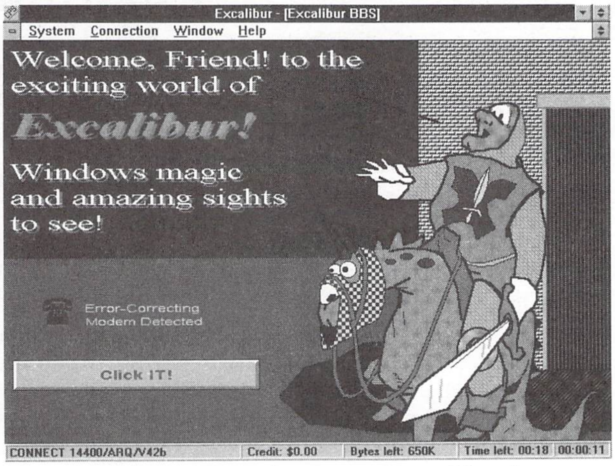
UNSHEATHING Excalibur

By Patrick Grote

Attention Windows users! A new BBS communications program will allow you to access a BBS through Microsoft's Windows. All you need to get started is a copy of Windows 3.1 or NT and a modem.

Progress. Creeping along like a spider in the dark, you only know it when it touches you. Yet just like the cassette tape giving way to the compact disc or the industrial age giving way to the information age, progress usually benefits us all. In the BBS world, relatively little has changed since 1981 when Ward Christensen set-up the first BBS. Sure, there have been the additions of color and sound to the BBS experience, but outside of higher speed modems, we haven't seen much progress ... until now.



Welcome, Friend! to the exciting world of Excalibur!

Windows magic and amazing sights to see!

HERE'S EXCALIBUR

Though millions of computers now use it, the advent of Microsoft's Windows software has brought little to the BBS world. This is a shame because Windows offers many things to the BBS user in the way of standard use, desktop manipulation and task switching to improve online productivity.

Coming to the rescue is Excalibur, perhaps the next generation in BBS software. The product is currently being tested on several bulletin boards and should be available by the beginning of 1994. With GIF thumbnail viewing, multitasking capabilities and high resolution screens painted faster than standard ANSI screens, Excalibur promises unexpected freedom to the BBS user.

NAVIGATING IS A BREEZE

This system makes navigating a BBS as easy as running Windows. All the menu options use standard Windows conventions, so you can minimize, maximize, open and close windows. If you don't like going through all the usual steps of looking for new messages or files, automate it! With Excalibur, you can use the Macro Recorder just like any other Windows application.

Another outstanding feature of Excalibur is the ability to perform multitasking. This means that if you're downloading a big file, you can minimize that window while you're receiving the file and work on something else like reading e-mail.

SIMPLIFIED FILE MANAGEMENT

The file section of Excalibur is where you start to see everything come together. Windows brings each file to life with all the information you need presented in a logical manner. In fact, you can see a thumbnail shot of any GIF files you want to download. What a feature! No longer do you have to guess if you have already seen the GIF. Hurray! If you decide to download a GIF, you can watch it as it downloads.

In addition, the message and file sections have icons and buttons that explain beforehand what each command does. Excalibur supports private e-mail and attached file transfer. An off-line reader will be available in a few months, but it does not support the QWK format.

THE NUTS AND BOLTS

BBS sysops may be interested in the technical aspects of Excalibur which are as fascinating as they are leading edge. Using Borland's C++ Object Windows and Paradox Engine as their crafting tools, developers Eric Weber and Tim Robinson have ensured that this software takes advantage of every Windows opportunity available. These opportunities include Dynamic Data Exchange (DDE) and Dynamic Link Libraries (DLL).

DDE is a must in today's Windows applications. It allows sysops to exchange data between other applications and their BBS. This means a sysop can have a nightly event which runs AmiPro, loads his welcome letter, feeds the proper information to the letter such as name and address, and prints the letter. No more messy cutting and pasting.

DLL's are used to seamlessly run secondary programs such as doors. A standard door kit will allow a sysop to offer many different types of games and software through on DLL file. These doors will have the standard Windows look, complete with drop-down menus.

TAKING A LOOK AT EXCALIBUR

To take a look at what an Excalibur board is like, BBS callers need special communications software. This software, about 500k compressed, is transferred to you automatically on your first call to the Excalibur Communications bulletin board. The number for this BBS is 918-496-8103.

Once you have the software, you can continue to explore the Excalibur BBS or check out some other boards that are running this software. A list of boards that are testing the product is located on the Excalibur bulletin board. A similiar list is also included in the README file that is also automatically transferred to your computer on your first call.

Easy to use, colorful and affordable, Excalibur brings a new class to BBS communications.

BBS SPOTLIGHT on STAR TREK BULLETIN BOARDS

Where can you find a transcript from a recent Star Trek episode? How can you learn the Klingon language? Who can answer technical questions about The Enterprise and its voyages? What is the Starfleet Club? Not every Trekkie knows the answers to all of these questions, but you can find the answers in the TrekNet.

TrekNet is a BBS network for Star Trek enthusiasts and the ideals it represents. Each TrekNet member is also a member of StarFleet, the international Star Trek Fan Club. Whether you are a fan of the original Star Trek, or you prefer the "Next Generation" or "Deep Space Nine," you are welcome to join! A list of the conferences offered by TrekNet follows this list.

List compiled by Clayton Melanson, Vice Coordinator and Rob Lehrman, International Coordinator of Galactic Crossroads BBS, (916) 334-5641 (modem).

BEFORE YOU DIAL...

- Be aware that some bulletin boards require users to be at least 21 years old and may have verification procedures.

- Test the number on a telephone (and preferably before 10:00 PM). Bulletin boards come and go, and the numbers are quickly reassigned. Let's not spook unsuspecting citizens with strange modem noises in the night.

- Be careful. While the vast majority of BBS users and sysops are fair, interesting and emotionally stable, there are sickos who own computers and modems. Online Access/Chicago Fine Print in not responsible for anything that happens to you, the user, as a result of calling any BBS number.

SCIENCE FICTION BULLETIN BOARDS

A science fiction lover's dream!!! What better place than "Cyberspace" for a gathering of sci-fi enthusiasts to exchange thoughts, book/movie reviews and GIFs ? While any of the following bulletin board systems can launch you into another world, some boards have sci-fi specialties. For high quality graphics and GIFs, call Space City Graphics. If lively conversation on various sci-fi topics is what you're seeking, try out Alternate Reality, Star O.N.E., or Sci FIDO. With all of the fantasy happening on these boards - it's hard to believe that this list is a reality. Have fun!

Thanks to Victor O'Rear of the Star One BBS, (619) 697-4073 (modem) and Wilma Meier of the Alternate Reality BBS, (510) 938-9656 (modem) for their help in compiling this list.

BBS SPOTLIGHT on RELIGIOUS BULLETIN BOARDS

You will find here a wide range of religious bulletin boards from Judaism to Christianity to Krishnaism and many others. All of these boards encourage the free exchange of thoughts and ideas. Whether you are interested in corresponding with those of the same faith or are curious about other religions, a plethora of BBS's are listed from which you may choose.

A variety of topics, religious or not, are addressed on these boards. You can discuss the Israeli/Palestinian dispute with the international members of KERSHERnet, a Judaic BBS network, in the K ARAB conference. Support for Epilepsy victims can be found in the Christian Fellowship Network Conference EPILEPSY. Haiku Poetry (HAIKU) and vegetarianism (VEGAN) are discussed in the conferences of DharmaNet, the Buddhist-oriented network. A conference in Baha'iNet is set up for Christians to ask questions about the Baha'i Faith (BAHAI CHAT). Look around...you are sure to find interesting and useful information.

CHRISTIANITY

PRIME Network

The PRIME Network, also known as the PreRapture Network, embraces Christians and non-Christians alike. Although mostly informal, it hosts some strict conferences that generate intense discussions. Included in these echos are: "Holy Bible" (discussions of Bible verses), "Kill Baby" (abortion debate), and "What Abouts" (religious debate). Other conferences quietly debate evolution, education, homeschooling, prayer requests, cooking, and more. Special areas are available exclusively for men, women, teens, and children.

This list was compiled by Steve Winter of the Pre-Rapture BBS, (919) 286-3962 (modem).

Christian Fellowship Network

The Christian Fellowship Network (CFN) is part of FamilyNet International, a "G-rated " network for family entertainment and education. CFN is the Christian division of the network, with most of the conferences being exclusive to CFN.

CFN is based on the premise that it is possible for Christians to have opposing views and still be right. Everyone is encouraged to express their beliefs. CFN is open to both Christians or non-Christians.

For more information on FamilyNet, Contact Bob Hoffman at the Olde Planet Earth, (708) 739-0033 (modem).

Create Powerful On-Line Databases!

Durand Communications has developed the first full featured on-line photograph database based on Galacticomm's Major BBS and the Major Database. Now you can create your own powerful image viewing databases using our DC NET Photograph Database and the DC Terminal program. Create your own multi-line database application or use one of our turn-key applications to provide complete database services with on-line photographs, powerful search parameters and much more. Brand new DC RIPterm allows for completely graphical front-ends. Call now for information or call our Demo BBS and download the DC Terminal program.

BUDDHISM

DharmaNet

DharmaNet is a collection of Buddhist oriented bulletin boards with the purpose of creating an environment in which Buddhists can share their practices and insights with others. DharmaNet also strives to support a Buddhist perspective in working for peace and enlightenment. Echoes in the network cover the theory, practice, and lifestyle of Buddhism as well as meditation, Haiku poetry, martial arts, vegetarianism and more. Everyone is welcome to take part in the DharmaNet echoes.

BAHAISM

Baha'i Net

The Baha'i Network is a collection of boards that are devoted to peace and the free exchange of information on the Baha'i faith. People of all faiths are welcome to join in the discussion. An echo is devoted entirely to questions Christians may have regarding the beliefs and philosophies of the Baha'i faith.

Other issues addresses by conferences are Baha'i music, health & food, electronic publishing, spiritual parenting, science & religion, and peace. Many of these boards host Baha'i Network conferences and specialize in another field. The Little Red Schoolhome, for example, also focuses on homeschooling .

This list was compiled by Pam Cammack of The Little Red Schoolhome BBS, (206) 352-2782 (modem).

Get Your Board Listed in the BBS Phone Book!

Many of our listings in the BBS Phone Book come from sysops who have sent us information about their bulletin boards. Now here's your chance to electronically submit the BBS information needed to get your board in the book! Choose one of the following three online options:

1.) Dial up Chicago Syslink at (708) 795-4442 and download the file "Online.BBS." You can then fill out the form at your leisure and upload it back to us.

OR

2.) (For FidoNet Members) Request the file "Online.BBS" from 1:115/622.

OR

3.) Send us a message via the Internet requesting the file "Online.BBS." We'll e-mail you a copy of the file. Our Internet address is online.access.syslink@mcs.com.

Your bulletin board listing will be seen by thousands of BBSers!

Contact us through the Chicago Syslink BBS for more information.

THE ONLINE ACCESS
BBS PHONE BOOK

The ONLINE ACCESS BBS Phone Book contains the modem numbers of thousands of bulletin board systems. The numbers are arranged by area code. Each entry consists of the board's number, city where it is located (when available), modem number and highest possible modem speed.

In each ONLINE ACCESS BBS Edition, we publish a new and different set of modem numbers for you to dial up. The entries for this issue were randomly selected from our database. Sysops interested in having their bulletin board listed in the phone book should see page 46 for further details. There is no cost to being listed in the BBS Phone Book.

As a courtesy to others, please test all modem numbers on a telephone before attempting to log on for the first time, preferrably before 10:00PM. Also, please be aware that some bulletin boards have age and content restrictions that are determined either by the sysop or state/local laws.

Inclusion in the ONLINE ACCESS BBS Phone Book does not represent an endorsement of that board by the magazine's publisher, Chicago Fine Print. ONLINE ACCESS is not responsible for anything that happens to you, the user, as a result of calling any of these boards.

Get them the information they need
MMB TEAMate™ Bulletin Board Software

Is Your Group Just Standing Around?

Meerkats instinctively work together. People don't. We can't guarantee your group will cooperate as well as the Meerkats but with TEAMate they will have access to the information they need, when they need it, wherever they are.

Since 1985 we've been building easy-to-use multiuser communications software designed for commercial applications. In fact, MMB TEAMate is the only bulletin board software with an integral text manager, content retrieval, multi-user outliner, conferencing, user forms and topic oriented data structure.

TEAMate Servers

Server versions of TEAMate are available for SCO, SUN, IBM RS/6000, HP-UX, DEC, AT&T 3B2, Sequent, Data General, Motorola, Stratus and Tandem. Servers support both client and terminal emulation access.

TEAMate Clients

GUI Clients for Windows 3.1, Macintosh and Motif will be available in the third quarter of 1993. With the client development kit, customized clients can be developed for special requirements. The client license permits unlimited distribution of the runtime client.

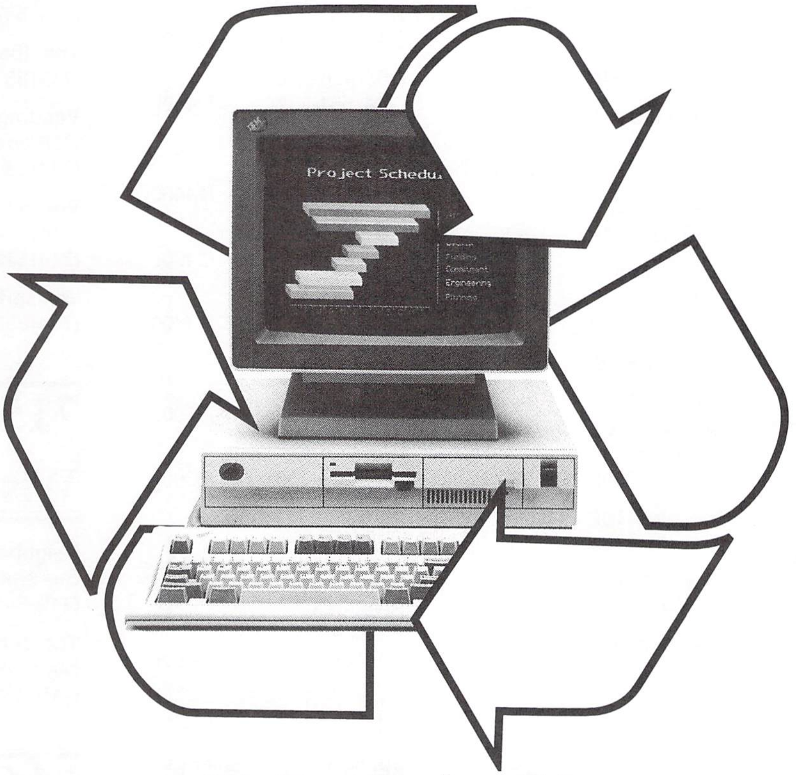
Silicon Ecology



It's Tax-Deductible

Instead of thinking of your company's used PCs, printers, modems, and other computer products as used up, consider them reusable. That's Silicon Ecology, and it makes sense all the way around.

The East West Foundation takes your surplus equipment and distributes it to American schools and colleges and to democratic and educational institutions in Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States, and Latin America—wherever it can make a difference. And it does make a difference.

Donating used or overstock computer equipment to the East West Foundation can make a difference to you, too—at the bottom line. Because all donations are tax-deductible.

To find out more about Silicon Ecology or arrange for a donation, please call:

She didn't ask to be hungry.

War, drought and famine engulfed her country, until the support of Americans like you helped us save her. But there are still many more who desperately need your help. Please care.

A monkey that can fit on the tip of your finger.

A waterfall twice the height of the Empire State Building.

And half the medicine known to man.

This is the rain forest.

★ The fastest growing & least expensive online investment system available! ★

It's the fastest growing online service in America with over 10,000 new subscribers in the last 20 weeks! Reality's Smart Investor Network™ by Money Magazine† is an online service that includes unlimited quotes,* fundamental stock, bond and mutual fund data, historical pricing charts, online broker access, timely investment articles, alerts and powerful integrated investment software. And, it's priced surprisingly low at $19 a month for everything.

Quotes from S&P ComStock

Move as fast as the markets with quotes (15 minute delay) on any stock, option or mutual fund from NYSE, AMEX and NASDAQ.

All this for a low flat monthly fee – no connect charges, no per quote fees, no prime-time charges, no trading obligations.

Complete Standard & Poor's Research Databases

Use your modem to tap into the latest information on more than 5000 stocks and 6000 bonds from S&P. It's like having the S&P Stock and Bond Guides on your computer. Plus, you can sort, filter and graph according to whatever criteria is right for you.

The Best of Morningstar

Plus, get comprehensive data updated online on over 2500 mutual funds from the premier mutual fund provider. Morningstar provides more than 40 data points on each fund including cumulative returns, risk level and fees. With Morningstar's data, you'll always have the latest and most accurate fund information.

Powerful Investment Software

You'll get more than just data. You also get powerful integrated tools for managing and analyzing investment information.

- Bar and line graphs to compare and contrast the performance of stocks, funds, and economic indicators on the same chart.
- Integrated portfolio manager to track your investments and provide detailed year-end reporting.
- Automatic portfolio updates.
- Automatic pricing, earnings and market indicator investment alerts every time you connect online.

Plus…

Get historical pricing data and charts, online access to discount brokers, CD and money market research database updates, asset allocation modeling, investment newsletter data, schedules from CNBC, and so much more… and it comes out to less than 52¢ a day!

DON'T JUST BREAK THE WALLS.

Face it. On line, everytime, you want terrific quality and ridiculously low cost. (Tossing in some incredible speed probably wouldn't hurt... while you're at it.)

CRIS Delivers, at a velocity so fast you won't even have time to blow your mind. Expand your universe. Break out of old molds and restrictions. See where your imagination can take you. Enjoy a real BC / AC (before CRIS / after CRIS) experience.

CRIS provides full Internet access. Sending and receiving E-mail is not a problem. BBS Direct, which allows you to connect directly to your favorite BBS's, is available to you. Teleconferencing is simple with CRIS, as is our GUI [Graphical User Interface.]

Inside CRIS are "tons" of multiplayer, real-time games. Or if you'd like to simply chat. Jump on. Cris is also an excellent idea for SYSOPS, since it allows users world-wide access to you. With CRIS, there are no barriers.

The Innovation Continues...

VERSION 6.1

of The Major BBS®

Hard at work in sun-swept Florida, our fearless developers have discovered the future of BBSing... EGA/VGA graphics and ANSI together on the same BBS! The Major BBS Version 6.1 gives you the power to create a graphical DOS-based BBS that also supports non-graphics users — everyone can use your system.

Our new multi-lingual/multi-protocol architecture lets you easily plug in languages, such as Spanish and French, and alternate presentation protocols like RIPscrip and NAPLPS. You can offer as many as 50 different languages for up to 256 simultaneous users on a single machine. Add new languages with just a couple of keystrokes.

Use our RIPscrip add-on option to give your users dazzling online graphics. The Sysop "paint" tool works directly with The Major BBS configuration utility and lets you draw beautiful scenes and mouse-driven menus. A royalty-free, graphics terminal program is included for distribution to your customers.

Version 6.1 also includes "doors" to a second machine, better MS-Windows support, MHS file attachments, an "upload message" feature in E-mail and Forums, improved security, and much more.

That's just the beginning. Our new Fax/Online add-on lets you integrate fax-mail and fax-server technology into your BBS. And our new Major Gateway/Internet add-on directly ties you into the world's largest message network.

As the competition fades into the sunset, we continue our quest to give you the best BBS in the world. See your local software dealer or call us at 1-800-328-1128.
